Book Summary: Roller Girl

Astrid and her best friend, Nicole, are taken to a roller derby where Astrid falls in love with the sport and makes the decision to do whatever it takes to become like her new role model, Rainbow Bite. Her first lessons consist of constantly falling and being overshadowed by the other junior rollers. She chooses to return and gradually gains confidence in herself through befriending Zoey, practicing, and passing notes to Rainbow Bite.

Nicole has declined to join roller camp and Astrid maintains the lie with her mother that she and Nicole are in camp together. As she and Nicole grow further apart, Astrid becomes more unsettled with Nicole’s new best friend until she decides that she and Nicole are no longer friends.

At roller camp, the junior rollers are faced with their first roller derby bout and Astrid dreams of being a jammer, the star of the team who scores all the points. She is dismayed to learn that Zoey is chosen to be a jammer instead.

[Spoiler]

Astrid is crushed in not being chosen as a jammer and her reaction results in a strain with her friendship with Zoey, making Astrid feel even more alone. Her mother finds out that Astrid has been lying to her and makes her apologize to Nicole, which begins to mend their friendship and opens Astrid’s eyes to how selfish she has been. She finds a way to support Zoey in the roller derby bout and they regain their friendship.

In the end, when faced with her two very different friendships, Astrid recognizes that she and Nicole have both changed over the summer and chooses to celebrate after the roller bout with her new roller derby friends.

Author Biography: Victoria Jamieson

Victoria Jamieson grew up in Havertown, Pennsylvania until her family moved to Florida. There she became fascinated by the Disney animators and decided she wanted to do it when she was older. She went to the Rhode Island School of Design and turned her focus towards illustration instead of animation. She began working as an illustrator with HarperCollins in addition to becoming involved in roller derby. Today she writes, illustrates, teaches children’s book illustration at Pacific Northwest College of Art and skates with the Rose City Rollers.

She currently lives with her husband and son in Portland, Oregon.
